INTRODUCTION

In 1661, Francis Small purchased from Chief Sunday of the Newichawannock Tribe a large amount of land in the southwestern part of the state of Maine (then part of Massachusetts). The name of Hubbardstown Plantation was given to that large piece of land in 1771, which was situated in York County and just west north west of Alfred, the county seat. Five years later it was settled by Benjamin Kines, Clement Steele, and John York who came from the town of York, also in York County. In 1785 the plantation was incorporated as a town and renamed Shapleigh after an early proprietor. In 1828 legislation was introduced to split Shapleigh into two towns and on March 6, 1830 Acton was incorporated as a separate town.

These records were extracted and transcribed from the Acton, Maine town records books and contain all births, marriage intentions and deaths found in the original records. While the bulk of the records begin in the late 1830s, there is an early record for the family of John Bodwell, the town clerk, recording the births of his children, beginning with his first child Plisha, born December 6th, 1797. None of the town meeting records have been included. The vital records have been transcribed as they appear in the books, including any misspellings, punctuation, etc.

If the vital record you are seeking is before the year of 1830, you should check the town records of Shapleigh, Maine since Acton was a part of Shapleigh before becoming a separate town that year.
